

Contents

|                                                                                                                                       |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| List of Illustrations                                                                                                                 | ix  |
| To the Reader                                                                                                                         | x   |
| 1 All the World's a Stage:Poetry and Theatre                                                                               | 1   |
| 2 Creeping Like Snail:Childhood, Education, Early Friendship, Sibling Rivalries                                            | 29  |
| 3 Sighing Like Furnace:Courtship and Sexual Desire                                                                         | 57  |
| 4 Full of Strange Oaths and Bearded Like the Pard:The Coming-of-Age of the Male                                            | 80  |
| 5 Jealous in Honour:Love and Friendship in Crisis                                                                          | 102 |
| 6 Wise Saws:Political and Social Disillusionment, Humankind'sRelationship to the Divine, and Philosophical Scepticism | 129 |
| 7 Modern Instances:Misogyny, Jealousy, Pessimism, and Midlife Crisis                                                       | 160 |
| 8 The Lean and Slippered Pantaloon:Ageing Fathers and their Daughters                                                      | 190 |
| 9 Last Scene of All:Retirement from the Theatre                                                                            | 212 |

|                      |     |
|----------------------|-----|
| 10 Shakespeare Today | 235 |
| Notes                | 248 |
| Further Reading      | 254 |
| Index                | 259 |